Spotlight on the Sooner State

Learn about the history of water in Oklahoma City and how the third largest city in the nation by land mass is investing in infrastructure and innovation to establish a high quality, reliable and resilient supply of water. Hear how this capital city, known as “The Modern Frontier,” is implementing a comprehensive, multi-faceted approach, including conservation, asset management, water recycling and technology, to modernize their approach to water.

Meet the Keynote Speaker

Chris Browning, City of Oklahoma City

Chris is currently the Utilities Director and the Water Trust General Manager for the City of Oklahoma City, serving a population of approximately 1.4 million. With more than thirty years of experience as a utility executive, he managed a number of large water utilities within the metro Atlanta and Dallas areas before coming to Oklahoma City in 2016.
